

Bright Talks Content Review | May 15, 2026

1. Topics: I think there's a lot of good to the thematic progression. I think we need to define how "large" each of the lessons/talks go.
 - a. I wonder if "Talk 1" is more accurate than "Lesson 1" (E.g., It sounds more approachable, fits the "Bright Talks" and "one hundred 1-minute conversations")
2. Structural/UX perspective: I feel like each lesson/talk should have a consistent structure to build familiarity/expectation/momentum. Plus, having a structure like this will help fill out content for each "talk." Eg,
 - a. "Talk" - Main message/video
 - b. "Impact" - data emphasizing importance)
 - c. "Suggestions" - Tips for age-appropriate discussion prompts/tips for talking to kids at preschool, elementary, middle, and high school ages.
 - d. "More" - Resources/links to more info on the topic.
 - e. "For You/For Parents" - messaging addressing encouragement, resources, and support for parents encountering their own sexual struggles related to the given topic.

LESSON NOTES

Opening video: Why the Conversation Matters and Why parents will know when to have the talk. Answers, "This is why we are having this talk with you"	YES. This is a huge huge huge opportunity to set the tone/vibe for the whole program. YES. I've heard this as "A hundred 1-minute talks instead of one 100-minute talk" Also important: Addressing parents shame. The "How in the world am I going to help my kid understand this when I've failed so much in understanding it myself?" Calling out the reality of that fear is powerful, and we can point to grace and hope that we're not called to be perfection as parents but to grow in love and caring for our children across all dimensions of parenting.
Lesson 1 Video: Bodies, Biology, and Anatomy Start with the Body, Biology, and Anatomy Science and Biblical based Technical Answers, "This is why we are having this talk with you"	I think the initial talk is important to normalize the conversation. E.g., I might even call it "Don't Panic. This is Normal." I grew up in the church but was never taught the healthy Biblical reality that God created Adam and Eve in his image as gendered, sexual beings on purpose and alone named them as "very good" among all his creation. It's not an afterthought. It's... like... vital.

	- Leaning into hope and joy of God's intentionality instead of leading with fear/shame/anxiety/anger. RESOURCE: God Made All of Me
Lesson 2: Boundaries and Safety (Doctor vs Family vs Others [Neighbors, Teachers, Classmates, Strangers]) Why it's okay to have boundaries with different people Why it's good to have boundaries and safety with our bodies	I would change this to "Boundaries and Consent" -Teaching appropriate boundaries and consent starts super young. It can be hard for parents, who want to make sure the kids don't upset grandma and might force a hug. This is a place where we can equip parents that they themselves are modeling what boundaries/consent look like. - Good Touch/Bad Touch is also a concept that can help kids understand that they have the autonomy to say when they don't like something, even if they are familiar with the person (98% of perpetrators are known to their victim, per RIANN's stats.) - Equipping kids with correct body part names is, like, the #1 thing you can do to protect your kids from CSA. RESOURCE: Little Big Chats: Consent
Lesson 3: Reproduction/Conception/Birth Answers "where do babies come from"	Obviously this is a biggie, but there's ways to break it down. That being said, I wonder if this should be about 3-5 talks...? - This is where I wish we could just buy out Birds and Bees, because their metaphor of seed/egg is a great model for how to use a metaphor that can grow with time.
Lesson 4: Pornography exists. How to talk about it with your child. Age appropriate conversations with your child about the dangers of pornography.	Resources: - Good Pictures, Bad Pictures (Jr. and Reg. Version) - Potentially tying in to Victory courses as parents identify their own issues here. Topically, this content will lean back on boundaries and consent, given that so much of pornography and sexual grooming in general happens digitally now.

Lesson 5: Cultivating an ongoing dialogue How to keep the conversation going beyond the small talk.	This one feels more foundational rather than a later single topic, so I'd make it an initial video or integrate it at an early point. NOTE: I love the word/theme of "cultivating" because it transforms a dreaded single conversation into a process of growing/tending/watering/harvesting a wholness regarding sexuality and relationship.
